Foreword

The implementation of China state cotton reserve policy without restriction leads to enormous cotton inventory in state warehouses and high price gap between Chinese and foreign cotton. Does the initial purpose to protect growers' benefits take effect? How is the operating status of enterprises, like textile mills, after experiencing large up-and-down? Why do players always call for policy reform? In face of various problems, Chinese government tries to adjust cotton policies constantly. In the year of 2014, the policy reform is propelled quickly. The ending of stockpiling, the fall of base price for reserved cotton and the implementation of direct subsidy pose profound impact on the whole cotton market. What are the specific influences? What change will see on cotton textile industry? Under such changes, how enterprises will adjust the management strategy? This conference will have a deep insight for you.
